Hen. Wolf's Fatal Ride.

FROZEN STIFF IN THE NUMBING COLD.

The following article appeared in the Philadelphia Press last Tuesday. It is dated at Bloomsburg, and purports to be written by a special correspondent. We know nothing of the facts, and cannot vouch for its truthfulness. The story is given just as we get it.

BLOOMSBURG, Jan. 20—"This yar tarnation cold weather minds me of suthin that happened in the Winter of '61, a few miles up the creek when Hen Wolf war found friz to death 'longside the road, where he had fell f'm his horse, arter ridin' ten miles fer a doctor to 'end me."

The speaker was old Silas Woods, who lives with his aged wife in a small log house along Fishing Creek, in the northern part of this county, as he addressed himself to two travelers who had stopped to "warm up," after a fifteen mile ride over rough roads, with the thermometer down close to zero. The old man extended the two benumbed strangers a hearty welcome. The abode is primitive in nature, and looks as though it had stood the storms of at least three decades. Yet inside it was toasting warm, made so by a rousing fire that blazed on the big hearth in the wall.

"Yaas, as I war a-sayin' ; this yar night 'minds me for all the world of the one whyn poor Hen friz to death for my account," continued the old man and as his wife was busy "setting out" something for the strangers to eat, "Si" evidently concluded that it was his duty to entertain their callers, so went on with his story.

"You see, it was this way. Thirty years ago these yar hills war mostly covered with thick hemlock and pine timber. Me and Mariar there hed only bin merried a short time afore, and as our little clearin' down here along the creek didn't give us more'n a good livin', we concluded that durin' the Winter we would go up into the woods and I'd make shingles. Well, Mariar, she was kind o' skittish like and 'lowed it would be ruther nice to have someone besides ourselves to live with us, and so I got Hen Wolf to g'long. He war about my age, an all-fired good fellar, and a mighty hard worker. I reck'ned that if we contracted together makin' shingles, it would go better hitched double than t'would in single harness. So airly in the Fall we two went up the creek here nigh onto eight miles, where we 'stablished a camp and hammered together a sort o' shanty to live in. We built her so's Hen would have a mighty snug place to sleep, up under the rafters, and Mariar and me had of the rooms down stairs for our sleeping quarters. Then we built a small shed for the horse, which we had to have to drag the shingle blocks to the shaver, and when thet war done we went down and brought up Mariar and a big tub of provisions. Oh, we war fixed fer a long stay, and everything went along sailin' to away in the winter."

Just here there is evidently a break in the story, either by the correspondent or the printer, but we infer that Silas got hurt and that Hen went for a doctor, and failed to return, and Silas and his wife became alarmed at his absence. Then the story goes on.

AN EMPTY SADDLE,

"All of a sudden we heard old Fan winner. She was just outside the door, and Mariar huried out. She called 'Hen,' but noboby answered. Thar under the trees stood old Fan, but Hen war nowhar to be seen. The horse was covered over with froth that war frozen into a sheet, showin' that she had run a long distance. Where war Hen? That war the question now, for both of us feared that suthin' had happened. But, hopin' that he would come along soon, Mariar led old Fan over and put her in the stable: then with lantern in hand brought the saddle back into the house. When she slung the saddle down in the corner suthin' like bottles jingled, and when she examined she found two bottles of medicine in the saddle pouch. Sure enough, Hen had reached the doctor's, and suthin' or nuther must o' happened him on the way back, but what that could be we must bide our time and see.

"In one of the bottles war liniment to wash the injury, while in the other war a stimulant for me to take, so Mariar set about fixin' it up accordin' to directions, all the while wonderin' what had become of Hen. She couldn't leave me to go down the road through the woods to look fer him, for I war gettin' sort o' flighty and needed all her attention so all that could be done war to wait fer mornin' ; fer then surely somebody would come up to the cabin, as they likely heard o' my accident down to the village.

A STIFF CORPSE BY THE ROAD.

"I tell you, gentlemen, that war an awful night. What with worryin' 'bout me and 'bout Hen it mighty nigh made Mariar crazy ; and I believe to this day that that's w'at started the gray hair on her head so early in life. Well, mornin' came at last, and about 9 o'clock we heard the tramp of horses outside. On lookin' out Mariar spied a man on horseback comin', and behind him close war two men in a sled with two horses hitched. The man on the hors war the doctor, and the two men were a couple of friends from the village. When the sled drew up to the door Mariar saw suthin' a layin' in the bottom all kivered up with a quilt. It war long and looked like the form o' a man. It didn't require the word from the men to tell her that it was the body of poor Hen, for she knew it without hearin' it from them.

"Yaas,, it war him. They had found him frozen stiff in the road about two miles down in the woods, where he had evidently fell from old Fan as she plunged along, and bein' stiff from the cold he warn't able to take care of himself, and died.

"Well, poor Hen war taken back to the village, and that afternoon, after bundlin' me up accordin' to the doctor's instructions, they hauled Mariar and me down from the woods too. I didn't go back to that shingle job till next Spring, and then it war only long enough to help load the ones we had made. And now, men, is it any wonder that this cold weather 'minds me 'f the night when Hen Wolf was friz to death on my account?"

Kellar's

The illusion on which Keller has been working for some months was presented at Egyptian Hall, and pronounced the best of the many mystifying tricks that famous magician has invented. He calls it Flyto, and a more incomprehensible optical delusion has never been presented. An open cage built of slats and standing on slender legs, entirely clear of the stage, is rolled to the footlights. A lady enters, curtains are pulled down and raised instantly, and in her place an English army officer in full uniform is found, the lady at the same time appearing at the street door of the hall. Then the cage is by means of ropes pulled up fifteen feet above the stage, and a smaller one takes its place. In this the lady is placed. Again the curtains are drawn for a moment, and the lady is found in the large cage suspended in mid-air. How the changes are made is the mystery, as both cages are in full view of the audience and have no visible place of egress. Many other tricks and illusions make up a wonderful programme.—Philadelphia Times.

Prof. Kellar will play in the Opera House Friday Evening, February 3rd.

THE UNION EVANGELISTIC SERVICES.

It is but two weeks until the Union Revival meetings planned by the Pastor's Union begin. They will be held in the Opera House as last winter, it being the largest room accessible and will begin February 12. The five churches taking part in the movement will hold a week's union services preceding, beginning Monday evening, February 6th in the Baptist church, to be led by the pastors in town.

Rev. Culler, a Lutheran minister in Burlington, Iowa, in a letter to Mr. Hileman says concerning the Evangelist who leads the meetings. "We had Rev. Davidson with us during the month of November 1891. Five churches united in our city in the good work viz : The First Presbyterian, First Methodist Episcopal, Christ's Protestant Episcopal, The United Presbyterian and our Trinity Lutheran He is a man of lovely spirit, plain and sound in his preaching and teaching and very conservative in his methods. He did us much good in this city. His words were above reasonable criticism. The pastors who joined in the work here were brought closer to our Lord and to one another through his presence and work".

Such a testimonial voluntarily given to a man as yet a stranger coming to work in our midst with the pastors for the good of the community is very assuring.

The back of winter seems to be broken, but it is not too late for it to mend again. Don't put away your heavy clothing just yet.

THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

'Tis education forms the common mind. Just as the twig is bent the tree is inclined.' This being the case every fair minded man will favor all proper means that may be made use of to promote a sound healthy education.

A moderately good education is almost as essential to the healthy moral developement of the man, as wholesome food is to a healthy physical developement. I said almost; I meant just what I said. We have all known men of whom it could not be said, they had a moderately good education, who were to use a modern phrase, level headed men ; and from a moral stand point were head and shoulders above some who were graduates of our best institutions of learning. But unwholesome food never does produce a healthy physical man.

Healthy food may be eaten to excess and thus become injurious. Education may be carried to such an extreme as to be injurious to the individual and to the body politic. People are not all possessed of such mental capacity as would enable them to make good use of a first class education ; even if by cramming process it could be drilled into them.

A certain English king who had been under the tutelage of the famous George Buchanan, and was more noted for his great learning (not wisdom) than any of his predecessors had been, was by his admirers called a second Solomon ; but by those who viewed him from a more impartial standpoint, he was pronounced the most learned fool in the kingdom. I mention this to illustrate my theory, that great learning is not at all times beneficial to the individual nor will it at all times enable him to command the respect of his fellow men.

The proposition is now being agitated to have our common schools kept open eight months in each year. I take the position that this is a longer term than is good for the pupil, and consequently an unwarranted expense upon the tax payer. Eight months is a longer time in my judgment than young pupils should be confined to their books at one time. A shorter term with healthy and useful employment between terms would give us young men who did not need to spend so much time during their college course at boat racing, foot ball or base ball exercises to develope their physical powers.

Eight months each year for fifteen years, the time that children are of legal school age, amounts to ten years attendance at school. Time sufficient to obtain a classical education, if the pupil has the mental capacity and disposition to reach so high a standard.

But few of the men most eminent for their learning have had the advantage (or perhaps I should say disadvantage) of so long a term of school. Amongst our educated men those who have had to exercise both body and mind in securing their education, have proved most useful in their various callings. Their early struggles have taught them that difficulties may be overcome ; and that a determination to succeed in their undertakings, usually overcomes all obstacles.

Rev. R. H. Conwell told in his lecture of a hero in private life who had to work his way to obtain an education. He adds that students who have to work usually excel in their studies, and the pupil who has to buy his own books will know better how to take care of them.

Now such talk does not exactly fit in with the theory, that children should be kept at school eight months in the year and their books furnished at public expense. But it does agree with what must be the result of every candid man's observation.

But suppose that I am mistaken, suppose that it it is right and proper to keep our school open eight or nine months each year, and that parents to do justice to their children, must give them the benefit of this arrangement.

The question then arises, is it practicable ? Can our people all afford it ?

To answer those questions I suggest, that those who favor this departure, sit down and count up how well they with an income of two or three hundred dollars a year, could afford to feed and clothe a family of children, buy the necessary books and pay the additional tax that would be required to keep the schools open so long a time. If after solving this problem, they still favor the proposed change, I think, they ought to be willing to have their salaries reduced to the above named figure.

But the advocates of this new departure tell us, that this increase in the school term is to be brought about without any increase in our local tax. This may for the present be true, but there is something else equally true, which they intentionally or by oversight neglect to tell, viz, that all money appropriated by the state for any purpose, comes out of the people. and that it does not make much difference to those who have it to pay, which pocket it comes out of, or by what means it is extracted.

Legislators who appropriate money for public use, have never been known to supply it from their own pockets.

So far as I know, they have never been accused of so doing. But I have heard insinuations that they sometimes take advantage of their official position to "feather their own nests." Such insinuations are of course unjust to the patriotic men who compose our state or national legislatures, and are only indulged in by persons of a cynical disposition. But they have hardly a right to complain, as the fact that they collect more from the people, than is needed to administer the affairs of state has, to say the least a suspicious look. Some are inclined to think, that their prime object in so doing is not that they may return it to them again. And if that were the real object, plain people are at a loss to find any good reason why it should pass through so many hands (each taking a liberal slice for his trouble) before those paying get the benefit thereof.

For my own part I have been kept so busy providing the wherewithal to keep body and soul together, and paying my taxes, that I have not had time to give the matter very careful study, and should like to have it explained, why things are thusly managed.

It is not neccessary at this stage of writing, to mention that I am not a literary man, and that in taking up literary work I have got out of my usual rut.

I am or rather was at one time something of a machinist. I learned while at that business, that the more complicated the machinery for doing a certain part or amount of work the more power it took to move it, and the more expensive it was to operate it counting motive power and wear and tear by friction &c.

By analogy I conclude that the more hands our money has to pass through, before it gets to the place of using it, the more it will lose by friction, corrosion or otherwise, mostly otherwise. Hence I do not believe that it is good policy to send our money around by Harrisburg, that we need for our public schools. Nor do I believe that those who are so free with their advice as to what is for our best interest, are better judges of our needs than we are ourselves. Our country is not yet so harmonized, that the same rules or regulations are adapted to all portions of it.

Farmers are aware that ground that has been cleared of stumps and stones, can be seeded with a drill and harvested with a self-binder, but new ground must be worked on the old plan. Before we adopt new theories, we had better be sure that our country is ripe for them.

PERSONAL.

Miss Jessie Kimble of Mt. Vernon is visiting at Mr. P. S. Harman's.

Hiram W. Thornton was in town on Monday. He is living at Albany, Oregon, and came east on a visit.

Samuel McHenry of Greenwood township, an old subscriber to this paper, was in town on Monday.

Prof. W. C. Mauser, Principal of the Orangeville Academy, was in town on Saturday. He is making a success of his school.

Joseph McDonald, a bright young man of Centralia, and a son of John McDonald, is attending the Normal this year.

R. Buckingham Esq., W. B. Taylor, John B. Casey and Charles Gilmore started on Monday morniog on a trip to Rochester.

Miss Mary Clark returned home last Saturday after an absence of two weeks, during which she visited New York, Boston, and other cities with her sister, Mrs. R. C. Neal.

MRS. DAVIS' LECTURE.

Mrs. L. A. Davis has been employed by the Women's Executive Committee of Home Missions of the Presbyterian church to deliver addresses throughout Pennsylvania.

She will be in Bloomsburg the 26th, and deliver an address in the Presbyterian church at 7:30 P. M.

They cordially invite men as well as women to be present. Mrs. Amelia Robison Barber of McPherson, Kan. a former and well known resident of Bloomsburg, says: "I commend most cordially, Mrs. Davis as a very zealous, sincere christian worker. Her very existence seems to be devoted to the furthering of her master's kingdom.

As a speaker she is logical, very plain spo en and whilst her speaking is distinct and her voice pleasant, she has a retiring manner.

She cannot fail to hold her audience and interest them on the subject she presents."

Meeting of Classis.

A special meeting of Wyoming Classis will be held in the Reformed Church of Bloomsburg on Thursday Feb. 2, at 1:30 p. m., to transact the following business:

1. To receive Rev. H. A. T. Benner from the Goshenhoppen Classis.
2. To confirm a call to him from the Freeland charge, and make provision for his insallation.
3. To receive Rev. W. S. Stubblebine from the Philadelphia Classis.
4. To confirm a call to him from the Scranton Mission, and make provision for his installation.
5. To receive Rev. C. H. Brandt from Maryland Classis, Synod of the Potomac.
6. To confirm a call to him from the Bloomsburg Congregation, and make provision for his installation.

To hear and act upon the report of the Committee to supply Scranton Mission.

A. HOUTZ, President.

P. S. The installation of Rev. C. H. Brandt will take place on the evening of Feb. 2.

Centralia Wants It.

Centralia people are anxiously awaiting the time when they will be connected with us by the electric railway. Their desire will be granted before the summer months have waxed and waned, as we have the assurance of a leading official that work will begin on that branch early in the coming Spring—Ashland Advocate.

George D. Butler died at the residence of his brother, Daniel Butler, on Wednesday morning at 3 o'clock from an overdose of laudanum which it is believe was taken by mistake and not with suicidal intent. He moved here recently from Danville, and was employed in the office of C. G. Barkley Esq. as clerk. He was a member of the Montour bar, and was at one time Prothonotary of that county.

The Schumann Concert Company will give an entertainment in the Opera House on Tuesday evening, January 31st. Miss Jessie Mann of Sunbury, a young lady well known here, is the solo pianist of this company. She is a thoroughly trained musician as are all the members of the company, and they will no doubt have as they well merit, a crowded house.

Mrs. John Kistler of Buck Horn will erect a double house on West street.

FOR LOVE'S SAKE.

"You've heard me, and now you can act according to your own liking. You've got to give up that girl or give up your home, for no boy of mine who so far forgets his name and family honor as to make such an alliance can ever remain a son of mine."

"Then I will give up my home, father, for I will never be so base as to forsake the girl I love without a just and reasonable cause. I would like to please you, and you know that I always have strived to do so but in this instance I can not. Jane Morton is a pure, noble girl, and even you can not say a word against her. She is poor, it is true, but that is no crime, and I love her."

"Then go. To me you are no longer a son. If you wish to disregard my wishes, go."

"Very well, father, I will go, and should you ever come to look at this matter in its true light you will see that I am not to blame. And some day you will see it aright. Some day you will know that Jane Morton is all that I tell you that she is, and that Florence Flaven is not the mild, sweet creature you think her to be. Some day you will understand these things, but too late, perhaps, to do any good."

"Go, I say. Don't stop to reason with me. You have already disgraced your name, and from this on you are nothing to me."

"Goodby, father; you have driven me out, but you have not killed my love and veneration for you. I will think of you often. Not as you are to-day, but as you used to be when we were all so happy. Goodby."

And the proud, noble son of Ralph Courtney went out from the old home, out from the presence of his angry father, out into the world to begin the great battle of life on his own responsibility. Perhaps it was an unwise thing to do, but thousands of others have done the same thing, and Lancey Courtney did not stop to reason out the future results of his actions, but proceeded at once to the home of the Mortons and importuned Jane to consent to an immediate union. At first she was averse to the proposition, believing it best to wait, hoping that time might soften the heart of Lancey's father so that at least they could marry with his consent and blessing. But when she knew that the old gentleman had denounced her and called her hard and undeserved names, her womanly pride got the better of her judgment and she consented to Lancey's proposition, and in less than two hours from the time our story opens she was Lancey Courtney's wife.

All night the elder Courtney fumed and stormed. He was mad that a son of his should fall in love with the daughter of a man who was guilty of the heinous crime of being poor. He was doubly mad that the same son should have the audacity to disregard his wishes in the matter. That Lancey would come back on the morrow and beg forgiveness he never doubted. But when the morrow came and Lancey came not the father's ire began to cool and anxiety took its place. He had not intended to drive his son away, but only hoped to teach him a lesson and frighten him into obedience.

But Lancey was gone. The next morning after his marriage he and his bride took the early train for the West. With but little of the world's goods they had gone forth, hand in hand, to labor for love's sake. The contest was bitter, and often, very often, uneven. Sometimes hope sank down below the horizon of their lives, and for days the sunlight of happiness was obscured by the dark clouds of doubt and uncertainty. But for years the bitter struggle was kept up. Lancey had studied law, and though bright and quick, somehow it seemed that people were slow to recognize his merits, and for a long time his shingle hung an idle plaything to the winds, and the name on it became weatherbeaten and dingy. Now and then he got a small fee, it is true, but they were so few and so meagre that very often the wolf of hunger lingered close about the door of his home.

Two little ones to share in the misery and suffering of the parents had been born to them, and sometimes when Lancey came home from his dingy little office to meet the pinched face of his faithful wife, his heart sank down and he sat listlessly with his head resting in his hands. On such occasions the true and faithful Jane threw aside her own great burden of care and devoted herself to an effort to revive the drooping spirits of her husband.

They heard and knew all that was going on under the roof of Lancey's old home; knew that Lancey's father had renounced him forever and given orders that Lancey's name should nevermore be mentioned in his presence. They knew, too, that Ralph Courtney had given everything, his home and his land, to his niece, Florence Flaven. But they did not complain, only sometimes there would come up in their hearts a feeling of bitterness.

Six long years had passed slowly along, and the fight for bread was as hard as ever. Sometimes Lancey almost made up his mind to write to his father and ask for assistance, then his self-pride would rise up and assert itself and he would hate himself for his weakness. Day after day the lines of care grew deeper on his brow and a shadow of sorrow began to spread over his features.

"Fate seems to be against us," he said one day when his purse was empty and the larder nearly so. "For years we have kept up the struggle and we are no nearer the end now than in the beginning. I am losing courage and dare not expect anything for the better."

"Lancey, what do you mean?" his patient wife said. "It is true our lives have been overshadowed, but the sun will shine again. We have to struggle and toil, it is true, and our living is meagre and sometimes the future looks black as night, but we have a great deal to make us feel rich and contented; we have health and two precious jewels to live for, and beside we have each other."

"Yes, I know," Lancey replied, "we have much to be thankful for. But there is so much we don't have—so much that others have—people no more deserving than ourselves. It seems hard that we must toil and strive year in and year out and never be able to get out of poverty's clutches."

"Others have riches and comforts we don't have, Lancey, but little do we know what other causes for misery they may possess. All is not gold that glitters, and neither are all wealthy people truly rich. So long as I have your love I am willing to work and suffer inconveniences."

"That is it," Lancey said, "that is why I want to be successful. It is for your sake. You give up everything, suffer everything for me, and you deserve better. You are too good, too true and too noble to suffer privations. For myself I shouldn't mind. But it is you and these little treasures."

"Keep up courage, Lancey. There never was a night so long but what light came at last. Our fight may be nearly over, and soon we may gain the victory."

The next day, as Lancey sat in his office musing over the words his wife had spoken and getting as much consolation as possible from them, an old man entered, and, tottering to a seat, rested for a few moments with his head buried in his hands, and Lancey, who had watched him intently, saw when he raised his face that tears had been falling from his eyes.

"I have come," he said, "to get you to help my son out of the clutches of the law. He has been arrested and charged with murder, but he is innocent. He is a noble boy, and God knows he would never, never commit such a deed, but the evidence is against him and I am poor and the lawyers will not help him."

Satisfying himself of the innocence of the old man's son, Lancey entered into the case with his whole soul. He expected no fee, but for the love of justice and to save the life of an innocent man he determined to exert himself to his utmost in behalf of the prisoner. He studied the case in all its bearings, worked up every particle of evidence that could be adduced in his client's favor, and when the trial came on the older attorneys and spectators, and even the judge on the bench, were surprised and astonished at the skill he displayed in handling witnesses and the readiness with which he showed up the points of law. But when it came his time to address the jury he unfolded his mind in so strong and clear a manner that people began to doubt if it was really Lancey Courtney to whom they were listening. As he advanced further into his argument his language became more and more impassioned. It seemed that his soul was thrown open, and he spoke as one inspired. Not a whisper was heard in the court-room; not a stir anywhere; no one moved. The jurors listened, and for two hours the twelve sturdy men hardly moved a muscle or batted an eye. Every eye was riveted on the speaker—every ear was strained to catch his words. His tall form seemed to rise up higher and higher as he proceeded with his great speech. Tears filled hundreds of eyes, and when he closed his impassioned appeal the spectators arose as one man and cheered and shouted regardless of the efforts of the court to prevent any demonstration. Lancey won his case and his future was assured and his fortune made.

The prisoner and his father made every effort to show their appreciation of Lancey's services, but no words, no action seemed adequate to the demand. They were happy, but their happiness was not greater than his. Though he received no fee, that cheer from the spectators was reward enough for his efforts.

Ten more years passed away—years full of happiness and content to Lancey and Jane; years that brought them sunshine and true enjoyment and a forgetfulness of all the privations and sufferings of the long years when they fought bravely and oftentimes wearily against want.

In that ten years Florence Flaven had married, and finding Ralph Courtney no longer of use had driven him out from his own home—out into the cold world whither he had driven his own child a few years before; out among strangers, without money or friends.

But Lancey and Jane in their prosperity had forgotten their own sufferings, and the past, with its bitter experiences, was buried away under the happiness of the present. Their hearts were too filled with love, and their minds too much occupied with higher and better thoughts, to harbor feelings of resentment. And it was but natural that they should feel a solicitude for the welfare of the elder Courtney, and when they came to know that he was turned away from his own door by the woman he had taken to his bosom as an own child, it was natural they should seek to relieve his sufferings and smooth his path to the grave.

Lancey went to his father and, taking him into his own home, made his last days as pleasant as possible. And Jane—she on account of whom he had driven his only child out of his home and out of his life—she administered to his wants with a gentleness and a care that soon won the old man's heart and made him feel that Lancey in choosing her had chosen a jewel. And when he looked on the sweet little woman and contrasted her gentleness and patience and kindness with the cold and haughty disdain of Florence he shuddered. "And yet," he thought, "I would have tied my son to that unfeeling creature and turned him away and robbed him of his inheritance because he would not renounce the truest woman living for one who has neither feeling no principle—because he would not throw away a precious gem of womanhood and take up a cold piece of clay."—Exchange.

HEN BETSINDA HELD THE ROSE.

When Betsinda held the rose
And the ring decked Giglio's finger,
Thackeray, 'twas sport to linger
With thy wise, gay hearted prose.
Books were merry, goodness knows,
When Betsinda held the rose.

Who but foggy drudglings doze
While Bob Gilpin toasts thy witches,
While the ghost waylays thy breeches,
Ingoldsby? Such tales as those
Exorcised our peevish woes
When Betsinda held the rose.

Realism, thou specious pose!
Haply it is good we met thee;
But, passed by, we'll scarce regret thee,
For we love the light that glows
Where Queen Fancy's pageant goes
And Betsinda holds the rose.

Shall we dare it? Then let's close
Doors tonight on things statistic,
Seek the hearth in circle mystic,
Till the conjured fire light shows
Where youth's bubbling fountain flows
And Betsinda holds the rose.

—Owen Wister.

Dickens' Debt Prisons.

How little—to take only one case—of the scenery of "Pickwick" remains; how, indeed, the whole of the London of that particular time has been improved off the face of the earth, a very cursory consideration of the topography of the book will amply show.

The abolition of imprisonment for debt, except by the side wind of committal for contempt of court, long ago swept away the sponging houses and debtors' prisons which occupy so large a space in English fiction from the time of Fielding and Smollett down to quite recent years.

The Fleet, its inhabitants and the squalid lives they led under Mr. Rokes and his comrades are only known to the readers of to-day by the descriptions in "Pickwick" and "Pendennis," and few people who nowadays pass down Farringdon street have any idea that the ramshackle old prison stood very nearly on the site of the Congregational Memorial hall as late as 1864, having survived its disestablishment as a debtors' jail nearly twenty years.—English Illustrated Magazine.

Some Familiar Quotations.

"Alliteration's artful aid" was spoken of by the little read poet, Churchill. "Pursues the even tenor of his way" was the phrase of a bishop of London in the last century, Dr. Porteous. "The pink of perfection" was originated by Oliver Goldsmith; so were "Measures, not men," and "Man wants but little here below, nor wants that little long." Gray, the author of the "Elegy," is responsible for many popular phrases, among them "Full many a gem of purest ray serene," "To waste its sweetness on the desert air," "This pleasing, anxious being," "The paths of glory lead but to the grave" and "Where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise." Dr. Johnson gave us "To point a moral and adorn a tale" and "Who lives to please must please to live." He also said, "Who drives fat oxen should himself be fat," in which there is more sound than sense.—London Tit-Bits.

Eggs That Come High.

Few people realize that there are other eggs besides those of hens which have enormous commercial value. In England so called "plovers' eggs," which are really those of lapwings, are sent to the city markets from the rural districts by hundreds of thousands. They are esteemed a great delicacy and fetch a very high price, the use of them being for that reason confined almost exclusively to the aristocracy and other luxurious persons.

Being only about the size of pigeons' eggs, a good many of them are required to make a dish. Men make a business of gathering them from the nests in marshes and wet fields.—Boston Transcript.

Peculiarities of a Coal Mine.

A coal mine near Manchester lies at the great depth of about 1,000 yards, and the boring presents the curious phenomenon of passing down from one seam of coal to another one 400 yards geologically higher. This is due to a reversed fault, by which the seams are thrown into this remarkable relative position. At the bottom of the mine the temperature is 84 degs. Fahr., which is unexpectedly low, and the barometer stands three inches higher than at the surface.—New York Telegram.

The Outside of Lemons.

Not many people stop to think about it, but the outside of a lemon is anything but clean. If you will look at it you will see some tiny spots like scales all over it. These are the eggs of an insect, and if the lemon is not washed they are likely to become an ingredient in whatever dish the lemon is used for.—Chicago Herald.

What He Asked For.

"Say, mister," said Weary Wilkins, "gimme a quarter, will yer?".

"Certainly," said Barber, handing him a dime.

"This ain't a quarter," said Wilkins.

"Yes, it is," said Barber. "It's a quarter of forty cents."—Harper's Bazar.

Englishmen always eat dinner before they go out to dinner, according to a humorist, because they know the risks they are running, but nobody ever warns the stranger, and so he walks placidly into the trap.

Scientists have discovered, it is said, that the memory is stronger in summer than in winter. Too much food, too much physical exercise and too much education are among the worst foes of the memory.

The beautiful Cleonice supplants all brunette rivals in the heart of her royal lover, and to do so she had only to veil her pearly tears by the shining gold of her hair.

The French photographer, M. Marey, has succeeded in photographing a dragon fly on the wing. The time of exposure was only 1-2,500th of a second.

There are little and great scoundrels. The last are worshiped by the ladies; the others are run in by the police.—Exchange.

Justice Lamar.

Judge Lamar is far and away the most picturesque figure on the bench of the United States Supreme Court. A thin, dreamy eyed, stoop-shouldered man, with a wan, fleshless face, to which the skin hangs in folds, long black gray and a ragged tuft of beard, he looks rather like a poet or an anarchist than like the scholarly jurist that he is. He is now sixty-seven. He passed from a seat in Congress to a colonelcy in the Confederate army, and then into the University of Michigan as professor of political economy. Mississippi sent him to the Senate in 1876 and re-elected him in 1882, but he resigned in order to become Secretary of the Interior under Cleveland. His former law partner, Senator Walthall, succeeded to his seat. It is said that while in partnership Walthall did all the work, while Lamar did all the dreaming anent the air-castles to be built out of the profits. After serving two years in the Cabinet he was improved into a judge of the United States Supreme Court. His manner in court quite harmonizes with his appearance. He never seems to listen to what is going on, but sits with subdued aspect doubled up in his chair, apparently lost in revery. He is almost as absent-minded as the great Pasteur himself. When Secretary of the Interior he used frequently to get lost in the corridors of the great Department building, and it is said that his associates are in constant fear of his scandalizing the court by walking up Pennsylvania Avenue in his judicial robes. He is profoundly moody. There are times when he will devote himself with intense application to the unravelling of some legal problems; at others he will shun the semblance of mental effort for weeks at a stretch. He is much given to the pleasure of riding, and is a familiar figure on pleasant days ambling along the streets of Washington on a staid old family horse.—M. Crofton, in February Lippincott's.

A congested condition of the throat and bronchial tubes is a dangerous symptom. Inflammation of the bronchia extending downward may soon reach and involve the lungs. Under such circumstances to avert consumption take Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup regularly according to the directions on the bottle.

Canned Corn Scarce and High.

The general rise in the price of canned goods is particularly marked in the case of canned corn. The price which opened at the beginning of season at 77 cents per case of two dozen cans, which was 10 to 15 cents higher than usual, is now $1, with a tendency to go higher. It is hard to state exactly what has caused the price of canned corn to rise. In 1892 641,661 more cases were packed in the United States than in 1891. The consumption, dealers say, must have largely increased during the past twelve months, as the stock on hand is much smaller than is usually the case at this time of the year.

Catarrh in the Head

Is undoubtedly a disease of the blood, and as such only a reliable blood purifier can effect a perfect cure. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best blood purifier, and it has cured many very severe cases of catarrh. It gives an appetite and builds up the whole system.

Hood's Pills act especially upon the liver rousing it from torpidity to its natural duties, cure constipation and assist digestion.

The Queen of England has only signed one death warrant during her long reign, and this was for a murderer in the Isle of Man, where, by some oversight, the law relieving reigning sovereigns from the painful duty of signing such documents had not been passed.

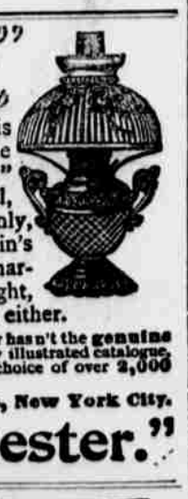
And a good lamp must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.



Look for this stamp—THE ROCHESTER. If the lamp dealer has'n't the genuine Rochester, and the style you want, send to us for our new illustrated catalogue, and we will send you a lamp safely by express—your choice of over 2,000 varieties from the Largest Lamp Store in the World.

A League of Members.

AGRICULTURAL LEGISLATORS ORGANIZE TO PUSH POPULAR MEASURES.

The organization of country members—which has been perfected by the election of John Cessna, as president; Noah Seanor, vice-president, and Senator Critchfield, secretary—are keeping their own counsel as to the real cause of its existence, but the ideas of Vice President Seanor was formulated in the following constitution and by-laws, which were intended to show to the public the entire absence of ulterior motive:

This organization shall be known as the Delegation from the Rural Districts of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

The organization shall be composed of members of the House and Senate of the session of 1893 who are directly or closely allied with the agricultural interest of this Commonwealth.

The object of this organization shall be to secure legislation in the best interest of the people.

It is not the purpose of this organization to antagonize any other interest of this Commonwealth, but to secure such legislation as will be for the benefit of the greatest number.

The by-laws for the organization proposed by Representative Seanor were as follows:—

First—There shall be one president, three vice-presidents, one secretary and ane assistant secretary, and one janitor shall be appointed by the president for each meeting.

Second—No person other than members shall be admitted to any of the meetings of this organization.

Third—Any person wishing to become a member of this organization shall pledge himself by signing his name not to make known to any person other than a member any of the proceedings of this organization during the session of the present Legislature.

Fourth—Any person wishing to become a member can do so at any of the subsequent meetings, on recommendation of any member of the organization.

which we propose to send to you, transportation paid. The little darling rests against a pillow, and is in the act of drawing off its pink sock, the mate of which has been pulled off and flung aside with a triumphant coo. The flesh tints are perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisite reproductions of this greatest painting of Ida Waugh (the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life) are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $400, and are the same size (17x22 inches). The baby is life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by such artists as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Deschamps, and others of world-wide renown. Take only two examples of what we did during the past year, "A Yard of Pansies," and "A White House Orchid" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep everyone posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion Magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and we give you, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2, and you will really get over $25 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. Why Thorghatten Has a Hole Through It.

Thorghatten, the famous Norwegian mountain, has a hole extending entirely through it from one side to the other. According to a Norwegian legend this same Mount Thorghatten was once a hat and belonged to one Thorg; hence the name Thorghatten. It seems that in the mythical ages a giant and giantess fell violently in love with each other. They were forced to part for a time, but vowed that they would marry in the near future. Soon after, however, the fickle woman pledged her troth to another. This angered her giant lover to a degree unknown to modern men of smaller stature. He was seventy miles from her when the elfs brought the news; but, selecting a good arrow, he shot it in her direction.

Now it happened that her brother, Thorg, was standing in direct line of the arrow's flight. It went through his hat and skull, killing him instantly, and fell harmless at the feet of the faithless giantess. She had the power of turning all objects into stone, and forthwith willed that her brother's hat become a stone monument to the tragedy. The cruel lover was turned to stone where he sat astride his horse at Hestmando, and the giantess herself petrified at Lecko. The two latter objects have disappeared, but Thorg's hat (Thorghatten) is still the object of many curious pilgrimages.—St. Louis Republic.

A Day in Bed.

We are naturally given to condemn and despise the idea of remaining in bed when our health is good and all our vital forces in fair working order. Apart from the matter of our nightly rest, we rarely think of "a day in bed" either as preservative of health or conducive to longevity. Yet I am convinced there is much to be said in favor of "a day in bed" now and then, as an aid to health in the middle aged and as a measure tending to prolong life in the old.

In bed the whole muscular system is at ease and the wear and tear of the body is reduced to a minimum. The processes of getting rid of waste matters are in abeyance; there is less waste to get rid of, and lungs, skin and kidneys have a measure of comparative repose. The nervous system, above all, is soothed and comforted by the "day in bed." Anxieties and worries disappear after the rest, and the individual returns to the workaday world refreshed and renovated, physically and mentally, in a degree such as the actions of no medicines could have accomplished.

In a word, the person who enjoys "a day in bed" is in the position of an engine whose fires are banked down and whose energies are recruiting for the renewal of the work of tomorrow.—Health Bulletin.

Cost of Mississippi Steamboats.

Pictures of the packets scarcely show how unlike our boats these are, the difference being in the methods of workmanship. Each story is built merely of sheathing, and in the best boats the doors and fanlights are hung on without frames around them—all loose and thin, as if they never encountered cold weather or bad storms. All the boats that I saw are as nearly alike in all respects as if one man had built them. I was told that the great packets cost only $70,000 to $100,000, so that the mere engine in a first class Atlantic coast, river or sound boat is seen to be of more value than one of these huge packets, and a prime reason for the difference in construction suggests itself.

But I do not mean to criticise, for these great, comfortable vessels serve their purpose where ours could not be used at all, and are altogether so useful and appropriate as well as picturesque and attractive to an eastern man that there is not room in my mind for aught than praise of them.—Julian Ralph in Harper's.

Electrically Guarded.

Many visitors to the Metropolitan Museum of Art wonder at the apparent absence of guard against theft and think how easy it would be to rifle almost any of the cases of their valuable contents. Each of these cases is guarded, however, by a small wire which connects with the office and also with a large gong in the basement. Each of the cases in the room, which contains the Moses-Lazarus collection of porcelain, miniatures and other valuable objects is connected with these electrical wires, so that if any person should attempt to force open a lid the signal would be given at once. The same arrangement is made for the safety of most of the other cases.—New York Herald.

Dividing the Swag.

The prisoner was in the police court for stealing a pocketbook and a shyster interviewed him.

"You want a lawyer to defend you, I suppose?" he said insinuatingly.

"I'd as soon have one as not," replied the prisoner, "if it doesn't cost too much."

"Well, I'll only charge you ten dollars."

"Thunderation!" exclaimed the prisoner; "there was only eleven dollars in the pocketbook, and you don't want more than half of it, do you?"—Detroit Free Press.

What Constitutes a Writer?

The question now agitating the Writers' club is this, What constitutes a writer? A certain lady recently demanded admission to this club of literary women on the strength of having sent in various things to Punch. The venerable jokist had rejected her efforts, it is said, but the club officers were assured on the writer's own authority that her articles were infinitely superior to the things he did print every week.—London Letter.

Cotton Growing in Southern Russia.

Cotton culture in South Russia, which was initiated some time ago by the minister of imperial domains, is now giving promising results. The earlier attempts failed through the ignorance of the cultivators, but since the Kherson school of agriculture took the matter up the propagation of American cotton seed has proved entirely successful.—London News.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 27, 1893.

President-elect Cleveland attended the funeral of ex-President Hayes last Friday at Freemont, Ohio. They were well acquainted and were warm friends.

Justice L. Q. C. Lamar, one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, died at Macon, Georgia on Monday. He held many prominent positions, among them being United States Senator, Secretary of the Interior in President Cleveland's cabinet, and was appointed to the Supreme bench by Cleveland.

The name of Hon. William F. Harrity, Secretary of the Commonwealth, has received particular mention by the press of the country in connection with the new Cabinet. Mr. Harrity possesses abundant qualifications for such an office. He is skilled in public affairs, is a man of standing at the bar, is at the head of an important financial institution, is of umblemished integrity, has youth, health and energy, is the leader of his party in the State, rendered conspicuous and efficient service as chairman of the national committee during the Presidential campaign, and is warmly admired by Mr. Cleveland, whose nomination at Chicago was brought about, to large extent, through the instrumentality of Mr. Harrity. If Mr. Harrity would consent to the personal sacrifices which would be necessitated by the severance of his present business relations, it is quite probable that he would be found in the next Cabinet.—Ledger.

To The Democrats of Columbia County.

I have been repeatedly asked how to proceed in nominating a township ticket under the new ballot law and have decided to ask the Democratic papers to print the following which is as near right as I understand it.

1st. To nominate a straight Democratic ticket (and this is the one I believe in) I would suggest that you call your caucus not later than the 4th day of February which will give ample time for the filing of certificates. After you have organized by the election of President and Secretary proceed with your nominations, and that done have them certified to by both your president and secretary and then file them with your township auditors at least ten days before the day of election. If you prefer to have a mixed ticket with Democrats and Republicans and Prohibitionists, &c., &c., and want to call it a citizens ticket, township ticket, borough ticket, or whatever, then it will have to be done by nomination papers. This is done by getting the signature of at least 3 per cent of the number of voters voting for such office at last election. In each township it would require the following number with residence and occupation:

	NO. OF SIGNERS		NO. OF SIGNERS
Beaver	5	Benton	8
Berwick E	10	Berwick W	9
Bloom E	14	Bloom W	10
Briarcreek	6	Catawissa	11
Centralia	15	Centre	5
Conyngham N	9	Conyngham S	6
Fishingcreek	8	Franklin	5
Greenwood E	5	Greenwood W	7
Hemlock	5	Jackson	5
Locust	9	Madison	5
Main	5	Millville	5
Mifflin	7	Montour	5
Mt. Pleasant	5	Orange	6
Pine	5	Roaringcreek	5
Scott E	6	Scott W	5
Sugarloaf N	5	Sugarloaf S	5

The signatures and qualification of these signers must be vouched for by at least five of the signers and then filed with the township auditors at least ten days before the day of election. I probably have the number of signers a little too high in some cases but it will not be as much trouble for you to get an extra name or two as it will be for me to look it up and get the exact number.

I have been asked whether a man that had voted the Republican or Prohibition ticket at the last preceding election should be allowed to help in a straight Democratic caucus. I should say most certainly let them all come in, if they will honestly and in good faith support the ticket. Again I have been asked whose place it is to call a caucus, whether it is the committeeman's place to call it? I do not think it necessarily is his place any more than any other good Democrat, but if nobody else does it, he certainly should.

J. H. MERCER, Chairman.

WASHINGTON LETTER

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23, 1893.

"The Carlisle tariff bill." How does that strike you as a popular title for the democratic tariff bill which is to be passed by the Fifty-third Congress? Unless a number of gentlemen who are in positions to know are wrong in their calculations Senator Carlisle, whose resignation as Senator will take effect the fourth of next month, is the man who will frame that bill. The great success of the Walker tariff bill, framed by President Polk's Secretary of the Treasury, was, it is said, what induced Mr. Cleveland to follow the same plan and entrust the framing of a tariff bill which is to be strictly in accord with democratic ideas, to his Secretary of the Treasury. It is not to be understood or inferred that this move is intended to deprive the Ways and Means Committee of the next House of any of its rights. The idea is merely to put into the hands of that committee a complete tariff bill, leaving its members to decide whether it shall be accepted as prepared or to be amended before being reported to the House. Whatever one's opinion of this method of preparing the tariff bill may be, it cannot be denied that John G. Carlisle is by experience and ability specially well qualified to frame the democratic bill. He has for many years been a leading tariff reformer, and his name attached to the bill would of itself make it popular with the rank and file of the democratic party.

Much curiosity is felt concerning the answer that Secretary Foster will make to Representative Scott's resolution, which has been adopted by the House, calling for information as to the delay in the erection of Public buildings for which the money has been appropriated by Congress. Mr. Scott says he is satisfied that the delay has been caused by the lack of money in the Treasury, and the facts are all apparently with him; but it is hardly probable that the wily Secretary of the Treasury will admit that.

Representative Bynum's resolution, which has been adopted by the House, calling on the Civil Service Commission to furnish a list of all the men reinstated in the classified service of the Government, under rule 10, since March 4, 1889, together with the date of their dismissal or resignation from the service, the States they were from and the States charged with their appointment, the date of their reinstatement, and the departments in which they were reinstated. Rule 10, referred to in this resolution was gotten up by republicans ostensibly to allow the reinstatement within one year of their dismissal or resignation of ex-soldiers, but if the information called for by the resolution be truthfully given it will be seen that it has been terribly stretched, both as to time and persons. It would be much better to absolutely suspend the Civil Service law so far as it relates to appointments and removals, for the first year of every administration, as proposed by Representative DeArmond's bill, now in the hands of a House committee, than to evade it, as has been done under this administration; besides, it would be much more manly and honorable.

The favorable report to the House on the bill repealing all federal election laws contains some very strong language, but, as the report truthfully says, "these laws are a continued menace to the peace and welfare of the country", and nothing said against them can be too strong. The House will pass this bill, not with any expectation that it can get through the Senate at this session, but to emphasize the position of the democratic party against these laws.

The republicans of the Senate have apparently adopted a sort of go-as-you-please pace. Two attempts have been made within the last week by means of caucuses, to get them together, but they were both failures. The most of them appear to wish to avoid doing anything, aside from some special bill in which they are interested, and to be unable to interest a sufficient number of their colleagues in any one measure to get it endorsed by a caucus. Having given up the silver question entirely they will this week caucus on the admission of new States. When the results of the last election are considered the republicans are excusable for being slightly demoralized.

Senator Wolcott has been having some fun at the expense of the Postmaster General. He doesn't like the Columbus stamps, and Saturday he made a humorous speech in favor of his joint resolution directing the Postmaster General to stop the sale of them, and he raised a laugh by saying that he had a letter from a physician who said that if the sale of these stamps was stopped the stock on hand might be utilized as chest protectors. He intimated in relation to Mr Wanamaker's statement that $1,500,000 profit would be realized from the sale of these stamps to collectors that this Government was to big too go into the chromo business, a business that might do for some little American State, that was a few thousand dollars "shy".

Things are now going with a rush at the headquarters of the Inaugural committee, and so great has been the demand for hotel accommodations that good quarters are getting scarce.

HELPED BOOTH TO RIDE.

A CHICAGOAN TELLS THE STORY OF AIDING THE CRIPPLED ASSASSIN TO ESCAPE.

Lieutenant A. R. Bainbridge, of Chicago, one of the three Confederate soldiers who, in a measure, assisted John Wilkes Booth to escape, after he had assassinated Abraham Lincoln, was in St. Louis, one night last week and entertained a party of guests, by relating his experience with the noted assassin.

"I had heard that Mr. Lincoln had been assassinated," said Lieutenant Bainbridge "but had no idea of meeting with his slayer in the manner I did. One afternoon, Captain Ruggles Captain Jett and myself were standing on the bank of the Rappahannock River, on the King George County Va., side, when two men drove up in a buggy. One of them alighted, and advancing towards us, asked me if we could get them across, as they were escaped prisoners from Fort McHenry. Captain Jett did not believe his story, and after questioning the stranger closely, he finally admitted that his name was Harold, and that the man in the buggy was none other than Booth.

"Hearing the explanation of his friend and partner in crime, Booth jumped out of the buggy the best he could with a broken leg and after hobbling to us on one crutch exclaimed:—

"'Gentlemen, I have heard what Harold told you. My name is Booth and I am worth $100,000 to any of you. Is there any of you who has the courage to win the prize.' He had a pistol in each hand and a determined look on his face. We decided to assist them to a certain extent and crossed them to Port Royal, where we suceeded in securing lodging for the fugitives on a farm owned by a man named Garrett, on the road to Bowling Green.

"We left Booth in a hammock out in the front yard with Harold to care for him, and retraced our steps, when an old negro by the name of Henry Lucas met us and informed me that a squad of soldiers was crossiug the river in pursuit of the fugitives we had just ferried over. We hurried back and passed the farm house where Booth was still reclining in a hammock. I called and informed him that a squad of soldiers was coming up the road, and that he had better get into a place of safety. He shouted to us:—

"'Ride boys. It will never do for the blue-coats to find you with me. I will take care of myself.'

We found refuge at a neighboring farm house, where we remained until the next morning. The capture and death of Booth followed."

The Woman Lobbyist in Washington.

There are some fictions concerning the Capitol at Washington. Among them is one that the woman lobbyist is a power, and that her wiles and arts are successfully employed on the most eminent statesmen in Congress.

It is true that there are women lobbyists, and that some of them years ago were eminently successful. There is nothing, however, so false as the idea that the woman lobbyist is a frequent spectacle, or that she has now any influence whatever on Congressmen or on legislation. The average Congressman is a respectable and self respecting man. It must be borne in mind that most members of the House of Representatives and of the Senate come from rural communities, and, as a rule, no man can be chosen from a rural community to a respectable public position who does not, at least apparently, walk in the paths of propriety. It may be that his reputation is false, but he is intent on preserving it, at all events, and consequently "it would not do," in the language of those who understand the full value of propriety, for a man who counts on continuing to receive the favors of a rural constituency to be seen very often in conversation with a professional woman lobbyist. Nor would the subject on which she desired to converse with him be likely to interest him if he were a man of position and character. No one who is in the habit of doing business with the national legislature, or whose affairs are of sufficient importance to demand caution and intelligence in their transaction, would employ a woman lobbyist. The first friend he met, if he had no local attorney, would warn him off. Sometimes a poor, broken-down, wronged, and inexperienced claimant, with justice on his side, and with a story of wrongs received from the red-tape system prevalent in Washington, will fall into the hands of the fair harpie, who will rob him of his spare cash, and leave him stranded and disappointed; for if anything beyond the natural indifference of Congressmen is needed to defeat a just claim, it is the effort of a woman lobbyist.—H. L. Nelson, in Harper's Weekly.

NIAGARA'S ICY COAT.

EVERYTHING WITHIN REACH OF THE DRIVING SPRAY ENVELOPED IN A GLISTENING COVERING.

Not within a generation has the present ice scenery at Niagara Falls been surpassed in extent, variety, and beauty. The trees in Prospect Park and on Goat Island, Luna Island, and all the surrounding shores, and every shrub and twig are covered with ice which glistens in the sunshine till the eye is dazzled and turns away to the shade. This ice coating is not a thin layer or varnish, but is sometimes several inches thick. Twigs no bigger than a pencil become as large around as a man's arm.

The ice is formed by the spray which is swept hither and thither by the shifting winds. Wherever it touches it freezes, and then the ice coating of every object near the Falls is constantly increasing in thickness while the cold weather continues.

The great ice bridge in the gorge has formed across the river just below the American Falls. It extends far down the river and under the upper suspension bridge in a great jagged, snow-covered ice field. It even extends up the river in several places almost to the very foot of the Falls themselves. A well beaten path extends across the bridge, and thousands cross and recross it every day. So firm is it now, and it is estimated to be fifty to seventy-five feet thick, that in the center of the river several rude shanties or booths have been erected by the enterprising Niagararians, where one can indulge in a hot Scotch, a cold beer, or if his taste inclines that way, in Kentucky bourbon.

The scene from the middle of the river is wild, weird, and Arctic in the extreme, the great cataract falling over the cliffs in front and above it with ceaseless roar: the clouds of spray and mist rolling up; half veiling the falling water at times, and at times again caught by a vagrant gust of wind and swept down the chasm and over the bridge, deluging the onlooker, leaving him wet and icy but spell bound by the scene.

Ice mounds have formed in several places along the foot of the Falls. One enormous one near the center of the American Falls has grown until it is fully one hundreed feet high. If the cold continues it is not unlikely to reach quite to the top of the cliff.

The Country Doctor.

IT REQUIRES A BIG FEE TO GET HIM OUT OF BED NIGHTS.

C. B. Mason in the Detroit Free Press.

In the summer of 1875 I was sojourning with a friend for a few weeks in a little fishing village on the coast of Maine. One night my friend was seized with a sudden and painful illness which necessitated my summoning the only doctor in the village, who lived on a farm a mile distant from our hotel and who combined agriculture with the practice of medicine. I aroused the sleeping physician with some difficulty and stated my errand, but despite my importunities he flatly refused to leave his home, as it was against an inflexible rule to leave his home at night, no matter how urgent the call. However, he generously consented to compound a mixture, with which I hastened back to the hotel, where I found my friend racked with pain and pleading for medical attendance. I again traversed the road to the doctor's house and thundered at the door, determined to force or bribe the pill compounder from his domicile. When the identity of the intruder was discovered the usually placid physician became irate and somewhat abusive. In vain I urged the necessity of the visit and pleaded the cause of humanity. Finally I offered any fee, in or out of reason, he might demand. This gradually softened him, and looking at me critically to see the full effect of his words, he said: "Young man, if I go up there with you to-night it will cost you a penny." Apprehensive of a mammoth fee, beyond the resources of a comparatively slender purse, I querried somewhat timidly: "What would you charge?" to which, with the same quizzical look fixed on my face, the answer slowly came: "If I go up there to night it will cost you one dollar and a half."

Joyously consenting to the condition, while concealing my amusement, I hastened home, and by a recital of the story put the sufferer in such good humor that the doctor, on his arrival, found the patient so far on the road to recovery that two visits completed the restoration. Subsequently I learned that the fees charged the villagers during the doctor's exclusive practice among them of four decades, had been fifty cents for calls made after nightfall and but half that sum for visits in the daytime.

President Harrison has taken good care of his private secretary, Mr. Elijah Halford, by appointing him to pay master vacancy in the army, a life position which carries with it the pay and et ceteras of a major of cavalry. The office by rights should go to some deserving officer of the army, and promotion is very slow just now; but in this, as in a good many other things, the President shows he regards the office as in the nature of a private snap to be used in the payment of personal obligations.—Pittsburg Post

Cold Charity.

THE SHIVERING TRAMP AT LAST FINDS A SYMPATHIZING WOMAN.

From the Detroit Free Press.

"Could you give me something to eat, ma'am?" asked a tramp at a house on Lafayette evenue.

"No," answered the woman at the door curtly, "we've nothing for tramps."

"Thank you, ma'am," and he turned meekly away, drawing the skirt of a wretched coat about him to keep out the cold, blinding storm.

"I might give you some old clothes if you wait until I can pick them out," said the woman, moved by the appearance of the forlorn figure.

He waited outside with the thermometer near zero, waited a long time, and whistled "Annie Laurie" for company.

Then the woman of the house returned, opened the door a crack, and handed him out a linen duster and a srraw hat.

"Thank you, ma'am," said the tramp gratefully; "there is just one thing more—"

"We haven't any drinking water; the pipes are frozen," she interrupted.

"No, ma'am; but if I might make so bold as to ask for an old fan. It would go so beautifully with this suit of clothes."

But she said that she drew the line at fans, and shut the door in his face.

RHEUMATISM PREVALENT.

Caused by the Sudden Changes of Temperature.

PEOPLE WHO HAVE FOUND RELIEF.

Rheumatism is more prevalent here than ever before.

When this disease fastens upon an individual with its soreness and pain, swelling the joints, rendering him helpless in his movements, and shattering his usefulness, he is indeed an object of pity.

The slight pain in the back, pain or stiffness of the joints or muscles, is a warning indication of an improvished condition of the blood, a low state of health, and if not attended to at once, means rheumatism.

Rheumatism can now be relieved and cured.

Since the introduction of Favorite Remedy, by Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., there has been fewer sufferers than ever before.

Favorite Remedy drives out rheumatic poison from the blood, restores the circulation, strengthens the nerve power.

The best proof of its value is the good it has done.

"I was afflicted with inflammatory rheumatism for fifteen years, writes Mr. E. P. Tayer, of East Nassau, N. Y. So severe that I was supposed to be a cripple for life. Under physicians treatment I grew worse. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy helped me from the time I first used it, and entirely cured me. Have felt no trace of the disease since, and that was three years ago."

The beautiful daughter of Mr. James Mc Farland, of DeMoines, Ia., was helpless for months with sciatic rheumatism. After a few doses of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, she began to grow better, appetite improved, slept well, and continuing its use, was cured.

"I was confined to my bed with rheumatism near my heart, writes Mr. C. L. Seaver, of Birmingham, Conn., and used Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy but a short while before it drove the rheumatism out of my system."

Mr. G. Lansing, of Troy, N. Y., had rheumatism so bad that he had to be turned over in bed. After using Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy but a short while was restored to health.

What reason then for suffering with rheumatism or neuralgia. This medicine will help you if given a trial.

Diphtheria is raging in many places throughout the state and country. Should any cases occur here, they should be reported at once to the proper authorities so that precaution may be taken to guard against its spread.

Mrs. Schreiber and Mrs. Fulton have leased one side of the double house of H. J. Clark on the corner of Iron and Fourth streets, and will remove there soon. Samuel H. Harman will reside with them. H. P. Chamberlin has leased the other side.

Mrs. H. E. Monroe of Philadelphia who lectured at the Normal School last year and gave the Lutheran Entertainment last Fall in the Opera House was the guest of Rev. and Mrs. Heilman last Friday, en route to Scranton where she gave the Lutheran Drama last Monday evening.

A subscription book has been opened to raise money to procure monuments to mark the sites of the old forts in this county. Col. John Jameson has it in hand. Any persons in the upper end who desire to contribute can make it known to Capt. J. M. Buckalew, or to Col. Jameson. It is a laudable project.

Bishop Phillips Brooks of Boston died on Monday last after a brief illness. He was the Episcopal Bishop of Massachusetts, and one of the best pulpit orators of the age. His death was unexpected, and resulted from a cold contracted in the performance of his official duties, which settled in his throat and ended in diptheria.

The name of Thomas McGraw, of Beach Haven, has been favorably mentioned for the nomination for County Commissioner, says the Shickshinny Democrat, and it adds: If there is any man in Luzerne county entitled to recognition for fidelity and service rendered the Democratic party it is Mr. McGraw. Besides, he is a man of sterling qualities. In fact, his nomination and election should find no opposition. By all means let us have Mr. McGraw.

Barnitz, Western Secretary of the Board of House Missions in the Lutheran church, whose field lies West of the Missouri river, with Des Moines for head quarters, will be in our town over Sunday February 5, to address the Woman's Missionary Society in their Jubilee service on that day. It is a rare exception for Rev. Barnitz to come east of the Mississippi river to do any work and it will be a privilege for our people to see and hear him.

For instance, Mrs. Chas. Rogers, of Bay City, Mich., accidentally spilled scalding water over her little boy. She promptly applied De Witt's Witch Hazel Salve, giving instant relief. It's a wonderfully good salve for burns, bruises, sores, and a sure cure for piles. W. S. Rishton, Druggist. 10-14 1y.

Railroad accidents have been numerous during the cold weather. Last Saturday nine persons were killed, twelve fatally injured, and nearly a hundred more or less seriously hurt by a collision at Alton Junction, Illinois. Seven persons were injured on the Pennsylvania road near Harrisburg by the second section of a passenger train running into the rear of a sleeping car of the first section on Saturday night. Reports of sleighing parties being run over by the cars at crossings have been frequent.

Ganoga Lake, in Sullivan county, is said to be the highest body of water in Pennsylvania, being 25,000 feet above the tide. It is a beautiful lake, a mile long, surrounded by a magnificent forest. The new railroad from Harvey's Lake to Towanda runs within a mile or so of Ganoga, and the Wilkesbarre Record says that a branch will shortly be constructed from the main line, at Ricketts to the lake, where a hotel is to be erected in place of the comfortable but primitive inn that has so long furnished food and shelter there.

Lake Erie Almost Frozen Solid.

Not in the history of the present generation has Lake Erie been frozen as it is now. There is an unbroken field of ice from the Detroit river to Put-in-Bay. Fishermen have driven fifteen miles out from Monroe and returned with the statement that it extended as far as they could see. The entire Lake Erie archipelago is frozen up and teams are crossing the mouth of the Detroit river. Fishermen have been compelled to suspend business. Considerable uneasiness is felt because if the winter breaks up as it usually does there can scarcely fail to be a serious flood.

Opening of the Reading Railroad's New Passenger Depot in Philadelphia.

The General Passenger Department of the Reading Railroad announces that on and after Sunday, 29th inst, the trains of the Reading Division, now running out of and into the Thirteenth and Callowhill Streets Depot, will depart from and arrive at the new Terminal Station, corner of Market and Twelfth Streets. The new building, when completed, will be the most magnificent railway structure in the country. In its present unfinished state it will be used only for the old Thirteenth and Callowhill Streets trains, the station at the latter point being abandoned so far as passenger traffic is concerned. Several weeks will probably elapse before the new edifice is ready for the trains now running to and from Ninth and Green Streets. For the present, the entrance and exit will be on the Twelfth Street side of the station, between Market and Filbert Streets.

A grand entertainment will be given in the Opera House, Friday evening, February 3rd. Frank C. Angle, manager of the Danville Opera House has made arrangements for Prof. Kellar and his company to appear in the Bloomsburg Opera House. He guarantees the performance first class in every particular, and will be given the same as seen at Mr. Kellar's own theatre in Philadelphia. Prof. Kellar can give his performance as complete in Bloomsburg Opera House as in his own theatre. Every attention will be paid to the ladies and gentlemen who attend as well as to keeping first class order.

The performance given by Prof. Kellar is wonderful and one that every one should see. He is assisted by twelve artists. We might mention some of the wonders performed by him but they are too numerous to mention, but will say that the performance will be given the same as at the Egyptian Hall in Philadelphia. Prof. Kellar plays the night of February 4th, in Danville, and many from that place will come up to see "KELLAR" in our city.

Piles of people have piles, but De Witt's Witch Hazel Salve will cure them. W. S. Rishton, Druggist. 10-14-1y

$100 Reward $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

Suffering Among Oystermen.

Persons from across the bay at Norfolk, Va., say that there are at least 4,000 oystermen along the shores of the Chesapeake who are dependent upon charity for food to sustain life, and that there is great suffering among them. They have done no work for a month or more. The packers of Portsmouth, Md., sent a general donation of flour and meat to their unemployed shuckers and laborers on Saturday.

EQUESTRIAN LIVERY.

Charles E. Hower has opened a livery stable at the rear of his premises on Third street, where he keeps saddle horses to hire. He has five head, well broken, safe for ladies and children. Thus far he has been well patronized. He will accompany those who are just learning to ride, if desired. tf.

Telephone Patents Expire.

THE BLAKE TRANSMITTER NOW PUBLIC PROPERTY AND OTHER INVENTIONS SOON TO BE FREE.

CHICAGO, Jan. 21.—One by one the patents covering telephone rights are expiring. At midnight last night the Blake transmitter, which receives the speech and transmits it over the wire, became the property of the public after many years exclusive control by the American Bell Telephone Company.

March 7 of this year will see the end of the main patent on the telephone that was issued to Alexander Graham Bell, and which covered the fundamental patent on the telephone, the transmission of speech electrically over a wire. At the same time the patent first issued on the receiver will expire, though a second patent was granted on this device until January 30, 1877, and that has until January 30 of next year to run.

With the expiration of the Bell patent the Bell telephone business is promised many rivals. An automatic telephone company is one which promises competiton, with an automatic switchboard that is designed to do away with the central office of the present system.

CREDULITY OF MAN.

TWO GOOD STORIES ILLUSTRATING A BROKER'S THEORY.

Some Men Will Believe Almost Anything Without Logical Investigation If Somebody They Happen to Know Appears to Be in Earnest.

They wandered from subject to subject in a listless way over their coffee and cigars, as men often do when they have enjoyed a good dinner, until the broker got on his favorite hobby—the average man's credulity. His companion, a lawyer, disagreed with him, and that at once started them on a lively argument. After a few minutes of general discussion the broker said:

"Well, I'll give you an instance. It is a pretty good story anyhow, and perfectly true, almost incredible as it seems. In the town where I was born there lives an old river captain named Stewart, who is a great practical joker. The proprietor of one of the two hotels in the place is a rather pompous and conceited old man. Stewart walked into the office of the hotel one day a few years ago, and drawing out a one dollar bank note asked the proprietor if he could change an eleven dollar bill. The old fellow said 'yes,' and took the bill, which, sure enough, had the number eleven in the corners, and just glancing at it handed the amount in change to Stewart.

"The joker had added another figure in ink to the numbers on the bill, and as the proprietor did not like to acknowledge that he had never seen an eleven dollar bill before he had only glanced at it casually before putting it in the drawer. Stewart walked out of the hotel and told all the men he met about the joke.

"About fifteen minutes after Stewart went away a man walked in and said to the proprietor:

"'Mr. Kennedy, I understand that you have an eleven dollar bill here. May I look at it? I never saw one.'

"Kennedy produced it, and the man marveled over it for several minutes. Before he got through examining it another man walked in and asked to see the bill, and then another and another. Finally Kennedy's curiosity became excited, and he thought he would see what the bill really looked like. He saw at once how it had been 'fixed,' and his face was a study. The boys shouted with laughter, and the old fellow had to acknowledge that the cigars were on him, and he set them up like a man."

"Hum! that was funny," commented the lawyer.

"Well, here's another instance," said the broker. "Stewart went to a picnic one day with some men, and one of them had on a brand new hat he had just bought in the city. It was an almost white derby, and it at once attracted Stewart's attention.

"'Well,' he said, going up to the young man, 'you've got one of those new hats, have you? Let's look at it?'

"The fellow took it off with some show of pride and handed it over for inspection.

"'I saw one of them hats the other day in the city,' said Stewart to the little group of men who had gathered around him, 'and I had half a mind to get it, but as I was in a hurry I didn't stop. They are something entirely new. They don't burn, you know. I'd like to have that hat. What'll you take for it?'

"'I don't want to sell it,' answered the owner, grinning with pleasure at being the object of so much attention. 'I didn't know it was fireproof though. Are you sure about it?'

"'Oh, yes,' replied Stewart confidently. Sell it to me and I'll show you.'

"'No, if you're sure I'll try it myself.' And the young countryman walked over to a wood fire, followed by the crowd of men who had been gaping with wonder at the reported qualities of the new hat.

"'How will I put it in?' he asked Stewart, who stood near by with a look of intense interest on his face.

"'Oh, chuck it right in. It can't hurt it,' replied the joker.

"So the innocent victim threw his hat into the fire, which of course made short work of it. The man's face was convulsed with rage and astonishment, and his temper was not improved when the crowd of men burst into a roar. He looked around for Stewart, but that gentleman had discreetly disappeared."

"Oh, come off! Go and tell that to the marines as your 'experience.' You can't make me believe such fairy stories," said his auditor.

"Those stories are perfectly straight; I knew the men myself."—New York Tribune.

Excess of Conscience.

Professor Palmer, of Harvard, discussing the teaching of morals in the public schools, says that excess of conscience has desolated New England like a scourge. Conscientiousness becomes a moral disease and takes the place in the spiritual life of nervous prostration in the physical life. People who are always fingering their motives, and unwholesomely preoccupied with directing their acts, lose spontaneity, sense of proportion. But what is more important to human society is their tendency to become bores, whose virtues are worse than their vices. A better rule of conduct is that of a person who says, "I've made reasonably sure that my instincts are all right, so I let my acts take care of themselves."—New York Evening Sun.

THE FLY EATING PLANT.

A Curious Operation of a Vegetable Devouring Animal Life.

One species of the drosea has its leaves rounded, while the other has them elongated, but both alike have them reddish in color and covered with short hairs or filaments. At the end of each of these hairs there is an enlarged gland which secretes a tiny drop of what appears to be harmless dew. Harmless, however, the liquid is not, for to most insects, especially small flies, the drosea is a most insidiously baited trap. The liquid is in reality a sweet, sticky substance, and if the very smallest fly does but touch it ever so lightly it sticks there and dies. The manner in which the plant afterward actually digests the bodies of the flies it entraps is interesting in the extreme.

Within a short time of the capture of a fly—so excessively sensitive are the glands—all the filaments growing around the one which has made the capture commence to bend inward, covering the luckless insect until it is securely within the grasp of the relentless plant. Each gland then pours out upon the body a digestive liquid, not altogether unlike the gastric juice of animals, and in the course of a day or two the fly is completely digested, the nutritive parts have been wholly absorbed by the plant and the filaments have bent back to their original position, ready to make another capture upon the first opportunity.

If, however, the substance caught by the leaf is of an indigestible nature, such as a grain of sand or a piece of stick blown by the winds on to the glands, the leaf does not remain closed more than a few hours. The number of insects thus caught must be very great. The plants themselves are very abundant in most upland bogs. Each plant has five or six leaves, and as many as thirteen dead flies have been found on a single leaf.

Curiously enough, Darwin, whose researches into the subject were of a most exhaustive and interesting nature, found that the leaves on his plants were killed when he gave them a surfeit of cheese and raw meat. The excessively sensitive nature of the glands almost surpasses conception. Darwin found that the absorption of only the 1-20,000,000th part of a grain of phosphate of ammonia or thereabout was sufficient to cause the filament bearing the gland to bend toward the center of the leaf.—Good Words.

Good Advice on the Subject of Hats.

Some one has said that not one man in a dozen knows how to wear a dress coat, and it is quite as true that a large number of individuals do not have any idea how to wear a hat. One man can wear his hat at the back of his head and look well dressed, while another having his hat in that position would look as though he were recovering from a protracted round of dissipation. It is just the same with the other positions, on the top of the head, on either side or drawn over the forehead. It is knowing how to wear a hat which makes it look well, and the knowledge often enables the poor man to look more dressy in a cheap hat than his richer neighbor in a much more costly one.

The time the knowledge is a saving one is when buying a hat. A good salesman will take care that a customer gets a hat that will fit him when worn in the position which is most becoming to that individual, but unless this is taken care of by either purchaser or salesman there will be little satisfaction from the purchase and the hat will probably blow off at the smallest provocation. A hat that fits and is worn right seldom blows off, no matter how high the wind may be.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Living in Chambers.

Within late years a new style of housekeeping has come in. It is a step further than the "flat." Besides it is much more swell to live in "chambers" than to live in a flat. It is just the thing for young married people. They take a suite of two or three rooms and bath. There is no kitchen. They furnish the rooms to please themselves, and have of course their own latchkey, just as if it were a flat. The house has an office down stairs a good deal like a hotel. Here mail, etc., is received. A reception room is provided down stairs, where guests wait while their cards are brought to you.

The suites are all supplied with bells. A ring brings a boy, as at a hotel. You can get ice water or stationery as at a hotel. You can have them "ring a messenger" or send a telegram. A cafe down stairs supplies meals as you want them. The house supplies chambermaid service if you want it. A more complete way of living who could conceive?—Washington Post.

Sprung from Hunters.

Traditions and folklore among the people of mountainous Kentucky are evanescent and vary widely in different localities. It appears that the people are sprung in part from the early hunters who came into the mountains when game was abundant, sport unfailing and living cheap. Among them now are still hunters, who know the haunts of bear and deer, needing no dogs. Even yet they prefer wild meat—even "possum" and "coon" and groundhog—to any other.—"Blue Grass Region of Kentucky."

A Tender Heart.

Little Johnny—I guess I'll get rid of that dog I found. He's too much of a fighter. He's always hurtin other dogs.

Fond Mother—My little cherub does not like to see the poor dogs hurt, I know.

Little Johnny—No'm, 'cause some of the other dogs is owned by bigger boys than I am.—Good News.

Stirring Him Up.

Husband—My physician tells me I must have a complete change of scene. I don't know but I'll have to run over to Europe.

Wife—That isn't necessary, dear; just take a day off and help me on my shopping.—Cloak Review.

Learned Men Disagree.

That even honest doctors may sometimes disagree is an evident fact, and in literature as in medicine there are two sides to a shield. When Professor E. H. Palmer was teaching oriental languages at Cambridge university, England, he received a note, badly written and incorrectly spelled, asking if he could "read the inclosed document."

The document proved to be a paper written in Persian, and presented no difficulty whatever to the professor, who sent it back, saying that it was a warrant or ticket for certain goods, setting forth in the name of Allah the quantity, quality and make of the stuff.

A day or two afterward another letter came from the same correspondent. It contained a ten pound note and the words:

DEAR SIR—Hooray for old Cambridge! This was what the Oxford chap said it was.

"This" proved to be a copy of the "Oxford chap's" translation.

"This very curious and most interesting document," he wrote, "appears to be a copy of an ancient Persian inscription, probably taken from a tomb or a triumphal column. It is, however, very incomplete. It reads as follows: 'In the name of God. This was erected by [name uncertain] in the year [uncertain]. It is one thousand four hundred and seventy-five —— long and seven hundred and thirty broad, and it'— Here the manuscript abruptly ends."—Youth's Companion.

The Jewels of a Saint.

The idea of sanctity usually carries with it a suggestion of poverty, and it may seem a contradiction to refer to the jewels of a saint. It has been customary for painters who choose for their subjects saints or martyrs to treat them with the utmost simplicity. In a majority of cases they are depicted as devoid of ornament or decoration, and in the few exceptional instances, as when the subject of the picture is a ruler or king, the gems are few and purely symbolic, being sufficient only to denote the rank of the individual portrayed.

Raphael, who was perhaps the greatest painter of religious subjects the world has known, has in most of his works adhered strictly to this rule, but in the head of "St. Cecilia" is to be noticed a departure from it. A row of pearls, to which are attached three pendants, ornaments her gown at the neck, and this is her only jewelry. The hair is simply arranged and without a jewel of any kind. The single row of gems, themselves the emblems of chastity, emphasizes the exquisite simplicity of the face.—Jewelers' Weekly.

An Unpardonable Offense.

A young woman condemns herself in the eyes of good society who is observed to enter alone with a young man a place for public refreshment, be the restaurant or tearoom ever so select. Bred under other conditions of a society so necessarily varying as that in our broad America, a stranger visiting New York, for instance, might readily and innocently make a mistake of this nature, and blush at finding herself condemned for it. In the same category of offenses is ranked that of maidens visiting places of public amusement under the escort of young men alone.

Many parts of the south and west allow this to be done with the smiling consent of good society, but in eastern cities it is considered a violation of the code of good form, and for the comfort, if not the convenience, of the girl considering it, had better be ranked among the lost privileges upon which social evolution may look back with fond regret.—Mrs. Burton Harrison in Ladies' Home Journal.

Mr. Emerson Knew What He Wanted.

"Those who know Mr. Emerson best," said Miss Louisa M. Alcott, "were assured that what seemed the decline of his faculties in his latter years was largely but a seeming. It was only words he could not command at will. His very forgetfulness of the names of things would often give occasion for a flash of his quaint, shrewd wit. I remember once he started for his usual walk, when a light shower came up, and he returned for his umbrella.

"He could not remember the word umbrella, and we, who had not noticed the shower, had no clew to what he was searching for. Another walking stick was brought him, another hat, a fresh 'kerchief, only to be refused with that perplexed shake of the head. 'I want,' said he at last—'I want—that thing—that your friends always—borrow—and never—bring back!' Could any one fail to recognize that description?"—Boston Transcript.

Overexercise.

Physicians are protesting against the overexercise taken by the slender, high strung people who would better be holding on to what little flesh they have, while it is next to impossible to stir up the lazy, heavy class to exert themselves enough to relieve them of their superfluous bulk. Nature does not safely guide us in this particular. Thin people are moved to be active and fleshy people to be lazy. The case calls for use of that brain power that plans and reasons and proves us higher than the monkey.—Newport News.

His Lordship's Weight.

The present Earl Granville, some years since, when Lord Leveson, swallowed half a crown during the performance of some conjuring trick at a Christmas party. He was none the worse for the misadventure, although the family were somewhat alarmed at first. The late earl, on being asked after his son's health, told Lord Rowton that he had gained eleven pounds. "Ah!" replied the witty peer, "that makes £11 2s. 6d."—London Tit-Bits.

If your nerves were steady enough to admit handling the silkworm's threads and you were to take a carpenter's rule and lay such threads side by side until they covered the space of an inch, you would find after completing the task that you had handled exactly 1,009 threads.—St. Louis Republic.

A SUMMER EPISODE.

Every young man has time and time again heard of the Summer girl, and lucky indeed is he who has been able to withstand her wiles and enchantments. We hear her mentioned in poetry and prose, until at last the fortunate ones (by those I mean those who have thus far only had the pleasure of reading about and hearing her spoken of) begin to think that to look for angels we need not leave this earth but only to look for the Summer girl.

In dealing with a question of importance we must always look on two sides, not always the one we think brightest; it is so with this question we must look at now.

To define the model Summer girl with all her peculiarities I must leave to some one who may be interested enough to study closely her ways and manners. I have lost interest in everything connected with her; the reason I am about to relate.

The Summer of 1890 had gone; vacation days, which we always look forward to with such fond hopes and dreams, had left us with nothing but the sweet memories that invariably cling to good times past.

When at college together five of my comrades and myself made an agreement that when our college life had ended and we parted, each to fight life's battle alone, we would, if we were spared, meet at least once a year to tell each other's successes or failures, as the case might be. The year 1890 was no exception to the rule, and the first night in October, the evening of our annual meeting, came around.

The evening proved to be cold and stormy, yet notwithstanding, on this our fifteenth meeting, we were all accounted for in our usual places; among the last, but not least, to arrive was Franklin Nelson, one of the youngest, but more thought of by us than any other one. I can still remember how he used to look at college—tall, well built, with dark brown hair and eyes, the latter especially calling attention to him if his manners and bearing, that were almost perfect, had not; to look at him it would seem as if trouble and care were entirely unknown to him. He had a way of looking at you while talking, as if he were reading your very thoughts, but to hear him laugh, which he did frequently, was a pleasure indeed. It seemed as if his whole soul was in it, which, added to his rare conversational powers, made him so popular wherever he happened to be; but to return to our narrative.

As I said, he entered rather late; we greeted his entrance with three cheers. We intended to give them with a will, but they almost died on our lips as we noticed his appearance. Could this be our Franklin of olden times? No! but, yes, we had to realize that it was. How changed! Pale, thin, all the life seemed to have been taken from him; even his old step had gone. He greeted each one of us personally, and then, with what seemed to be, to us a heavy sigh, sank into the nearest chair. We started the evening's sport at once. Some cracked jokes, others sang, but through it all we felt as if something had gone wrong, yet we could have hardly said what it was. Frank laughed and joked with the rest, but the dullest one in the party could see he was playing a part, especially as his old laugh that we had so much admired had left him.

The part of the evening we always looked forward to with the greatest pleasure was after we had seen that our inner man had been well satisfied, and the cigars had been passed around, we settled down to hear each one relate his experience. To-night we applauded every one and everything. It needed something to keep our spirits up. Frank's time to speak (we always reserved him to the end, believing that the best should be kept until the last) was eagerly awaited. At last it came—would that we had never called on him! He slowly arose as his name was called, and advancing to the center of the room, so that the light fell full on his colorless face, and leaning heavily on the table, as if too weak to support himself, began: "Dear friends and comrades, we have met again to-night for the fifteenth time. As we look back on each meeting we think what joyous times they were, bright spots on the pathway of life, like some bright oasis in the desert where the weary traveller has time to stop a moment and drink the cooling waters, and rest, before resuming his burden and starting forth on the weary road once more. I have not the time to-night to say all I would like to, but will come to what I have to say at once: You may all have noticed a change in my appearance and manner, and of that my story to-night has to deal. You all know that from the cradle I was reared in luxury and how my life, previous to this year, has been spent, after college, doing nothing but live, enjoying it as if it was some bright dream. But now——"

He drew his hand over his brow, his large brown eyes set in a marble face, burned like coals of fire; not one of us dared breathe, so afraid we were of interrupting him.

"Now," he resumed, "all has changed. Last spring I awoke to the fact that my health was feiling. My parents were soon aware of the fact and, so, urged on by them and my doctor, I found myself at the beginning of the summer at a small hotel in a pretty village situated near our largest and most fashionable watering places; the hotel being convenient to both ocean and river, the place being quiet, away from all noise and excitement, it suited a person in my position very well. Things went quietly for a few weeks and then I noticed a gradual improvement in my health, and the color came back to my cheeks, at last I was myself once more. One day a friend and myself started for a day's fishing. We went to our usual fishing grounds, but luck seemed against us; we could not tempt the fish to bite. We waited later than usual, hoping our luck would change, but we did not succeed so we started for home. The row homeward was very pleasant, we being treated on our way to a beautiful sunset.

"When nearing our destination my friend called my attention to a small sailboat containing two young ladies, in the center of the stream, where the current was both swift and deep; we were gradually approaching each other when we noticed a sudden squall of wind strike the boat that immediately overturned it. Without a moment's hesitation I leaped overboard, striving to reach the spot where I had seen one of the young ladies sink. I reached it as she came up and grasped her by her hair, trying to keep her afloat, but the severe exertion I had undergone to reach the spot was too severe for me; my head swam around, lights appeared before my eyes, and I lost consciousness. Just as I was sinking I was seized and drawn into the boat by my friend.

"A week passed before I was able to leave my room, the shock losing for me what I had gained. One afternoon my friend, who had been a constant companion at my bedside, asked me to take a drive. I felt able to go and consented. We were just about to enter the carriage when a young lady met us. My friend introduced her to me as the one I had saved. She thanked me over and over again. I myself could only say something about my not wishing it spoken about. My whole heart seemed to have left me in an instant. I could hardly look into her eyes, so confused was I. I may say here, during my life I had very little to do with the ladies; so to suddenly find myself deeply in love was very strange to me at first. I managed to call on her almost every day. She encouraged me in many different ways, and by and by I could always be found in her company, with sailing, driving, rowing and all kinds of pleasures. Time sped swiftly along, and before I could realize it the time for our departure was at hand. The last night of our stay at B. had arrived. I had walked with her to our favorite retreat on the cliff overlooking the sea. The moon had just risen and everything was covered with its silvery light. I took her hand in mine. She did not resist. I spoke to her of the happy times we had together, and growing bolder, at last declared my love and asked her to be mine. At that moment the moon was covered by a dark cloud. I think, since then, it must have been an evil omen, but I scarcely heeded it as I waited anxiously for her answer, which she at last gave me. Looking at me, with her face covered with blushes she could not hide, she told me she would be mine. The cloud that had covered the moon vanished in the distance and things were brighter to me than ever they had been since, or will be again. We sat and talked of our future, and our plans we laid, as all lovers do. Oh! those moments were full of bliss indeed, but as all things must come to an end we were obliged to go; with promises to meet soon we parted, I to go to my home and friends, she to her's.

"I called to see her at her home in the city; she always appeared so glad to see me, at all times greeting me with that fascinating manner that had so endeared her to me. One morning last week I arose late. After breakfast I sat down by the fire to read the paper and smoke. I had about completed the paper when a note attracted my eye. I read it. The walls and furniture seemed to dance before my eyes. I pinched myself to see if I was not asleep, but it was too true. I was wide awake. I read it over and over again, the words burning themselves into my brain like red-hot irons. I seized my hat and rushed from the house. It seemed ages before I reached her home. I was obliged to wait before I could see her. Each moment to me seemed a year. She greeted me in her old manner, just as if nothing had happened. I could not speak, but, holding the paper before her, I awaited her denial, as I could not expect anything else, but she gave me a cold little laugh, and forgetting how much I loved her, how my whole life depended on her, she told me that she had only kept my acquaintance as a summer one, making out of the whole thing a fine joke. The notice of her marriage in the paper was but too true. At that moment my heart seemed to break. I have been walking in a dream ever since. Friends, every moment to me is one of agony."

He stopped to catch his breath, at the same time pressing his handkerchief to his lips. There was not a dry eye in the room. We thought he had finished, but he continued: "Let my life be a lesson. Trust not a young woman not well known to you, especially the summer acquaintances, which are more to be feared than any others. I have done my best, boys. I will now bid my last good-by." We arose as one man to offer him words of cheer and comfort, but without a word he fell to the floor. We raised his head to give him air, but the life, for which he cared so little, had left him forever. A small, empty vial, labelled poison, concealed in his handkerchief, told us all. A more sorrowful gathering than that one of '90 ne'er met before. We, I do not think, will ever meet together again; but, wherever I go in life, I will never have erased from my memory poor Frank and his shattered life.

You now have my reason for not caring to joke about this topic. Frank might have been with us now if some one had warned him in time, but laugh as we all may we might be in a like position, and then each one is supposed to be his own master. But few indeed, can stand against the enchantments of the Summer girl.—Horace Beaman.

Wives and Mothers know that lard makes food too "rich" for children and delicate persons, that it is unhealthy for everybody & that it tends to dyspepsia, &c.

So long as LARD is LARD these things must be so, but the NEW SHORTENING — COTTOLENE is better than lard for all cooking purposes, & has none of the evil effects of lard. Beware of imitations. Get the GENUINE.

Nutriment in Eggs.

THEIR VALUE AS A FOOD AND THEIR USE IN CERTAIN DISEASES.

From the Germantown Telegraph.

Six large eggs will weigh about a pound. As a flesh producer one pound of eggs is equal to one pound of beef. About one-third of the weight of an egg is solid nutriment, which is more than can be said of meat. There are no bones and tough pieces that have to be laid aside. Practically an egg is animal food and yet there is none of the disagreeable work of the butcher necessary to obtain it. Eggs at average prices are among the cheapest and most nutritious articles of diet. Like milk, an egg is complete food in itself, containing everything necessary for the development of a perfect animal. It is also easily digested, if not damaged in cooking. Indeed, there is no more concentrated and nourishing food than eggs.

The albumen, oil and saline matter are, as in milk, in the right proportion for sustaining animal life. The valuable or important salts are contained in the yolk, and hence this portion of the egg is most useful in some forms of disease. A weakly person, in whom nerve force is deficient and the blood impoverished, may take the yolk of egg with advantage. The iron and the phosphoric compounds are in a condition to be easily assimilated, although homœpathic in quantity, nevertheless exert a marked influence on the system. The yolks of eggs, containing, as they do, less albumen, are not so injuriously affected by heat as the whites, and a hard-boiled yolk may be usually eaten by invalids without inconvenience.

It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd. cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."
UNITED HOSPITAL AND DISPENSARY, Boston, Mass.
